This is a work of fiction. Every person, place and crime in these puzzles is invented. Any resemblance to real people, living or dead, or to real events is coincidental.

Every puzzle in this book was checked by computer to have exactly one solution.

How to Solve These Cases

Every case in this book is a small, fair mystery. You are given a victim, a list of suspects and a set of clues. Nothing is hidden and there are no trick questions. If you reason carefully, exactly one name is left.

The cases come in four kinds, and they get harder as you go. Start anywhere you like, but if logic puzzles are new to you, begin with Case 1.

Part One: Cross-Off Cases (1 to 18)

You get a table of six suspects: where each was, whether they are left- or right-handed, how tall they are and the color of their hair. Each piece of evidence is a fact about the killer. Read a clue, find every suspect it rules out, and cross them off. When one suspect is left, you have your killer.

Watch for clues that say either... or (or both). Such a clue clears only the suspects who fail both halves.

Parts Two and Three: Grid Cases (19 to 50)

At the moment of the murder, each suspect was in a different room and was carrying a different object. The clues let you work out exactly who was where, and with what. Then the Crime Scene Report tells you the room where the victim died, or the weapon that was used, and that points to one suspect.

Use the grid on the right-hand page. Every square stands for one pair, such as a suspect and a room. Put an X in a square when the clues prove that pair is impossible. Put a circle when a pair is certain, then X out the rest of that row and column in the same block, because each suspect has only one room and one object.

Two habits solve most grids. First, when a row or column in a block has only one empty square left, that square must be a circle. Second, link the blocks: if Ada was in the cellar, and the rope was not in the cellar, then Ada was not carrying the rope.

Read clues with care. Of Ada and the person in the cellar, one carried the rope and the other carried the lamp tells you three things: Ada was not in the cellar, Ada had the rope or the lamp, and so did whoever was in the cellar.

Part Four: One Liar (51 to 60)

These are grid cases with a twist. There is no Crime Scene Report. Instead, each suspect makes one statement. The innocent suspects all tell the truth. The killer, and only the killer, lies. Use the clues and the statements together: the full answer is the only one in which exactly one statement is false.

A good way in: pick a statement and ask, what if this is the lie? Then every other statement must be true. If that leads to a contradiction, that speaker is innocent and the statement is true.

Solutions

Every solution is at the back of the book, with the reasoning step by step, the full grid, and the motive. If you are stuck, read only the first step of the solution, then come back and carry on.

A Detective's Tips

Use a pencil. Go through the clues more than once: a clue that told you nothing at first often opens up after you have marked a few squares. And never guess. Every case here can be solved by pure reasoning, one clue at a time.

PART ONE

Warm-Up Cases

CASES 1 TO 18

Six suspects, a handful of evidence. Cross off everyone who does not fit.

The Cold Cup at the Copper Kettle

THE VICTIM: Hugo Marsh, owner of the Copper Kettle Café.

He was found slumped over table nine after closing, a bitter-smelling espresso at his elbow.

THE SUSPECTS

	Name	Who	Was in the	Hand	Height	Hair
